

American Families Deserve PLANE FACTS

Do you know where the planes you fly on are maintained? If you think they are maintained on U.S. soil, by American mechanics, think again!

Some planes are fixed and maintained in the United States by certified American mechanics – who are held to the highest standards and strictest federal oversight.

But U.S. airlines offshore an alarming percentage of major aircraft maintenance and engine overhauls to China, South and Central America – where standards and oversight are less safe than in the U.S.A.

You deserve to know where the plane you are flying has been repaired.

You deserve to be able to book travel on aircraft safely and securely maintained by expert mechanics right here in America.

Newly introduced federal legislation – The 'Truth in Flying Bill' (The Aircraft Maintenance Outsourcing Disclosure Act of 2018) – requires airlines to plainly state on their websites the cities and countries in which their aircraft undergo heavy maintenance.

This information would also be provided to consumers as they shop for flights, as well as on ticket confirmation and boarding passes.

The Transport Workers Union of America, which represents thousands of the best, most highly trained mechanics in the world, supports this vital legislation.
